COUNCIL OF EDITORS OF LEARNED JOURNALS

The Council of Editors of Learned Journals is open to all editors of learned journals, bulletin, newsletters, and annual reports. Its purpose is to create an international forum for discussion of current editorial issues and to form an Allied Organization of the Modern Language Association.

CELI seminars present innovative publishing strategies, while the workshops sharpen professional practices. The organization offers valuable forums for assisting those working in the field of learned journals.

Members receive free subscription to Scholarly Publishing, free display books at the MLA convention, and discounted rates for 7LS. New members are always welcome.

Every year CELJ sponsors two sessions at the annual MLA convention. One session is devoted to formal business, including reports from officers, regional directors, and editors of Editors' Notes. The second part of the business meeting is more informal, providing a forum for the exchange of ideas.

Winners of awards are featured in a special section of the award, which is devoted to the presentation of the award. The winners are chosen by the judges, who are widely respected in the academic community.

Another regular service of CELJ is the annual meeting of the MLA, which is held in different locations throughout the country. The meetings provide a forum for the exchange of ideas and the sharing of knowledge.

For CELJ membership information, contact John M. Serio, CELJ Secretary/Treasurer, The Wallace Stevens Journal, Clarkson University, Potsdam NY 13699-5750.
