Council of Editors of Learned Journals

Marlowe Studies: An Annual solicits essays on scholarly topics directly related to Christopher Marlowe and his role in the literary culture of his time. We welcome studies of his plays and poetry; to classical, medieval, and continental contexts; performance and theater history; textual studies; and the author's professional milieu and place in early modern English poetry, drama, and culture.

Clio: A Journal of Literature, History, and the Philosophy of History explores three interrelated topics: literature as informed by historical understandings, historical writings considered as literature, and philosophy of history, with a special interest in Hegel.

Clio's focus is historiography, and we are especially interested in scholarship that reflects contemporary theoretical approaches to our traditional focus.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF: Rachel E. Hite
